

This list has been developed for the sole purpose of providing information to parent groups and educators to monitor online information relating to their CHILDREN... this is not intended to promote use for adults and/or spouses. Keep in mind that the feds recently passed a law regarding downloading programs on phones to spy or keep track of adults. It is a federal crime without the other person's consent. Consult with laws in your state regarding children as well. These are just recommendations and, as we all know can change without notice so do you own DUE DILIGENCE. You may want to consider advising your children as well since they are the authorized possessor of the devices. We DO NOT promote any of these apps, this is merely a resource.

**NOTE** There are few FREE apps. Have parents read the fine print before they buy the apps... Most run around $50 annually. Most track location, texts, phone calls, emails, etc.

**NOTE** Some of these require that the phone be JAILBROKEN so pay attention to what you are purchasing.

Parental control apps are great tools for keeping kids away from the dangerous corners of the Web, as well letting parents keep an eye on what their kids are up to online, whether it's on PCs or smartphones. The problem with parental control apps on the iPhone is that Apple's strict ecosystem doesn't let them have much control over the phone, especially compared with the permissive Android environment. Features such as monitoring apps, messages, and calls just aren't feasible on iOS—or so we thought. uKnowKids Premier may sacrifice Web filtering, but through its clever use of iCloud, the service offers monitoring functionality we didn't think was possible in an iPhone app. That makes it our Editors' Choice for iPhone parental control apps. There's an Android version available as well, although strangely it's only compatible with phones, not tablets.
