Course Length: One Year
Number of Credits: 5 per Semester

BRIEF COURSE DESCRIPTION:
This course is designed to help students to assume responsibility for themselves and interact responsibly with others. Components of the class include self esteem enhancement, assertiveness skills, decision-making, value clarification, communication/relationship skills and goal setting.

GENERAL GOALS/PURPOSES:
• Students will understand the concept of self esteem and appreciate their own inherent value and worth.
• Students will understand their significance and realize that what they do does indeed make a difference.
• Students will identify and expand their positive attributes, so they build the confidence to meet life’s challenges successfully.
• Students will acknowledge ownership and accountability for their own attitudes, statements and behaviors.
• Students will recognize their affect on others. They learn how they can assume more control over themselves and thus more influence over what happens to them in life.
• Students will interact with others in ways that increase understanding and cooperation while decreasing conflict.
• Students deal effectively with their anger so they can calmly and rationally apply techniques for resolving difficult situations in positive, productive ways.
• Students will develop the ability to set specific goals and the commitment and determination to stick to them until they have achieved them.
• Students will explore social, emotional, and mental dimensions of maturity.
• Students will reflect on values and determine which are personally important.
• Students will learn that good relationships develop from experience and from conscious learning and skills.
• Students will learn about the difference between healthy and unhealthy relationships.
